Video and computer games are becoming an increasingly popular form of entertainment in the college circuit. Some researchers say the fad is one that sometimes becomes an addiction.

Students getting buzz from Duke Nukem's gun

Since July of this year, a video game called "Diablo II" has shattered personal computer game sales records, making it arguably the most popular video game ever.

The sales explosion, driven by a thriving demographic of college students, represents a new genre of multi-media Internet games, and what some believe to be a new form of addiction.

Others call it harmless entertainment. Nevertheless, it grips its users and is creating a culture of BYU students who spend hours each day in corridors and on battlefields of vivid, intense "gaming," while never leaving their back rooms.

Scott Jeppsen, assistant manager of Electronic Boutique, said the static, shifty-eyed ghosts have been exorcised. "This is definitely not your Pac-Man on the console."

Gamers Anonymous?

Maressa Hecht Orzack, psychologist and founder of Computer Addiction Services in Belmont, Mass., said some college students are realizing that the classic journey to save the princess becomes a realization to ditch the princess and save themselves.

"The fantasy is phenomenal," Orzack said. "It's an escape from everything else. And they get caught."

Brandon Dayton did. The junior from Salt Lake City majoring in media arts, said he was hooked on "Starcraft," a game of military strategy. He said he had to swear himself off the program.

"It's destructive. It destroys your social life and your health," Dayton said. "I would tell someone else to not even start. It's not worth it."

Scientific tests in the last year show evidence that video games have physiologically addictive qualities.

A team of British scientists published a report in January 1999 that traced the level of dopamine released in the brain during video game play. The chemical upsurge, known to be a key element of physical addiction, is roughly equal to the increase caused by illegal amphetamines, known as "speed." It is also found in a prescription dose of the anti-hyperactivity medicine, Ritalin.

Many would say lighten up, that players don't actually get a buzz off of Duke Nukem's smoking gun. As one student said, "It's like reading a good book. You get hooked."

But Orzack said many of her patients compare video game addiction to drugs.

"Whatever it is, we are treating it to block that high," Orzack said.

If there is anything addicting that sets the new games apart, most will say that's a no-brainer: awesome technology. The games offer a social outlet with on-line leagues, incredible speed and an array of characters and weapons so complex that each game is a spellbinding journey that can take months to finish, and some never end.

"We make it as engaging and compelling and immersive as possible," said Bill Roper, senior producer of Blizzard Entertainment, which makes "Diablo II."

"We like the fact that our games have that addictive quality. It means we've succeeded in making it fun," Roper said.

Educators overcome stereotypes

By Nikki Purdy

As Stacy Lacouture walks down the hallways of Roy Martin Middle School, the children call out her name and wave, and she calls them by name and waves back.

"They love it that people take time out to talk to them," said Lacouture, a graduate from BYU's secondary education program.

Lacouture joins the elite membership of students and graduates from BYU who live their lives in service of children. She teaches U.S. history at a Title I at-risk school in Las Vegas.

The stereotypes on BYU campus suggest these students and graduates chose to be education majors because they were not smart enough to do other majors or were just looking to get married.

Linda Parker, director of the education advisement center, said this stereotype is not true.

"The average GPA of the admitted students is a 3.5," Parker said.

Their grade point averages generally go up after their initial acceptance because they are passionate about the subject, and the competition is intense, Parker said.

Thousands of students enroll in the education program at BYU every year. They spend their days studying and learning to do a job that receives no respect in the professional world, requires long hours of hard work and the pay leaves a lot to be desired, Lacouture said.

So why do they do it?

"You have a chance to change kids' lives," said Rachel Bevell, a junior from LaGrande, Ore., majoring in elementary education. "They look up to you so much. I love that feeling."

Both Bevell and Lacouture have wanted to be teachers since they were little. Bevell followed in the footsteps of both parents while Mr. Hallinan, a third-grade teacher, inspired Lacouture.

Stephanie Porter, a BYU graduate teaching second grade at Larsen Elementary School in Spanish Fork, started out as a pre-medicine major looking into pediatrics until she had a conference with her Book of Mormon teacher who asked her whether she wanted to help children physically or spiritually. After thinking about it, Porter decided on elementary education.

Parker said they are in it because they want to be with children and want to influence children's lives despite all of the hardships prevalent in the teaching profession.

"I don't expect it to be easy at all," Bevell said. "I am overwhelmed by the fact that I have to teach these kids everything I know."

Teaching does not involve only reading, writing and arithmetic. It includes teaching the children world principles such as giving and sharing as well, Bevell said.

Teachers often have to play the role of disciplinarian because the kids do not learn at home, Lacouture said.

Where Lacouture teaches, the children do not have good role models and most of their parents work two or three jobs. Many of the kids get involved in gangs because they see their older brothers and sisters in them and

Teen-ager regrets hacking into NASA

MIAMI — A teen-age hacker sentenced to six months at a juvenile detention center for invading NASA and Pentagon computers now regrets what he did.

"Never again," 16-year-old Jonathan James told The Miami Herald. "It's not worth it, because all of it was for fun and games and they're putting me in jail for it. I don't want that to happen again. I can find other stuff for fun."

James told the newspaper he had also hacked into other networks, including BellSouth and the Miami-Dade school system. His claims could not be verified immediately.

Armed federal agents raided his home in January, seizing four desktop computers, a laptop and a hand-held computer. He was sentenced Thursday after pleading guilty to invading NASA computers that support the international space station, as well as Pentagon systems that monitor the potential for nuclear, chemical and biological attacks against the United States and its allies.

Lewinsky hired at British TV network

NEW YORK — Monica Lewinsky, whose affair with President Clinton made her a celebrity in the United States, will be reporting on American culture for a British television network, her publicist said Sunday.

The former White House intern has agreed to host six 4-minute segments dubbed "Postcards from Monica" for Britain's Channel 5, according to Juli Nadler, Lewinsky's spokeswoman.

Nadler said the segments would be a "lighthearted look at American pop culture for British viewers." She declined to say how much Lewinsky would be paid.

Though the segments will air in November, Lewinsky won't be reporting on the United States' major event of that month — the presidential election.

Indonesian police arrest for bombings

JAKARTA, Indonesia — Indonesian police announced Sunday they had arrested 25 people suspected of carrying out a spate of bombings in the capital and said the next target would have been the U.S. Embassy.

The suspects were implicated in attacks including a blast at the Jakarta Stock Exchange that killed 15 people, said Brig. Gen. Dadang Garnida.

One suspect, armed with a grenade, was detained on his way to attack the U.S. Embassy and a crowded department store nearby, the officer said.

U.S. Embassy officials declined to comment Sunday. The U.S. State Department warned last week that American companies and interests might be targeted by the bombers.

Polls show Matheson beating Smith

SALT LAKE CITY — Democrat Jim Matheson holds a 14-percentage-point lead over Republican Derek Smith in the 2nd Congressional District race, according to a new poll.

But Democrats are lagging behind in all other races, according to the Deseret News/KSL-TV survey by pollster Dan Jones & Associates.

The poll has a margin of error of plus or minus 7 percentage points.

The rest of the state's Democrats are trailing in November's other big races. Jones' poll of 613 residents Sept. 18-21, found that, with a margin of error of plus or minus four percentage points:

- Republican Gov. Mike Leavitt holds a 16-point lead over Democrat Bill Orton, with 8 percent undecided.
- Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, has a 33-point advantage over state Sen. Scott Howell, D-Granite.
- GOP attorney general candidate Mark Shurtleff has a 15-point lead over Democrat Reed Richards in the race to replace retiring Democratic Attorney General Jan Graham.

Bush unveils health plan for elderly

Associated Press

ALLENTOWN, Pa. — Calling Medicare "too vital to be neglected," George W. Bush announced a $158 billion plan to help seniors pay for prescription drugs and to improve benefits in the health program that ensures millions of elderly Americans.

"By history and by choice, our nation makes a promise: We will honor our fathers and our mothers by providing quality health insurance for every senior," Bush said Tuesday. The Republican presidential nominees' plan would pay at least one-fourth of the cost of prescription drug coverage, whether seniors choose the optional new Medicare benefit Bush proposes or a private plan. The elderly poor would get drug plans for free.

Democratic nominee Al Gore, who wants a more expansive prescription plan added to Medicare, said Bush's plan wouldn't do enough for millions of middle-class seniors.

"Nearly half of all of those who don't have coverage today would not get coverage under the plan that he's announcing today," Gore said during a campaign stop in Columbus, Ohio. He also charged that the plan would push seniors into managed care plans and said Bush wouldn't be able to pay for it, anyway, because of his tax cuts.

"The biggest problem is there's no money to pay for it if you give away all of the surplus in the form of a giant tax cut to the wealthy at the expense of the middle class," Gore said. But a Bush spokeswoman said the proposal fit with the governor's balanced budget plan.

Under Bush's proposal, health plans that participate in Medicare would be required to provide a prescription drug benefit, which most of them do already. Traditional Medicare plans administered by the government currently offer no prescription coverage.

The Texas governor said his effort would "modernize" Medicare, and criticized Vice President Gore for failing to do so. "For eight years the current administration has had this opportunity and has squandered it," Bush said during his speech at a senior center.

Bush's plan will sharpen the debate over health care. Gore has proposed spending an estimated $253 billion over 10 years to add a prescription drug benefit to Medicare, the federal program for elderly and disabled Americans. The Bush campaign has characterized Gore's plan as an expensive, big government program.

Bush spokeswoman K. Hughes said he would let seniors choose the best health plan to help them pay for it, whether private or under Medicare, "unlike Al Gore's plan, which locks you into a one-size-fits-all government plan."

In Washington, Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala said Bush's plan would vary from state to state and "leads down a path that changes the Medicare plan."

"What they do is they privatize and start income-testing for the first time a benefit and the question is which one is next," Shalala said.

house ready to be demolished ost met its end in flames Fri- afternoon.

small fire started at a house 1022 W. and 500 North, ovo around 1 p.m. while rkers were beginning to olish the building, said Capt. in Gildea of the Provo Fire partment.

he demolition team was under the impression that power to the house had been cut off, Gildea said.

Apparently it wasn't.

When workers pulled the main power-feed that connected the house to the main power lines from the house, the live wires were exposed and started a small fire, Gildea said.

Firefighters were summoned and were able to put out the fire fairly quickly.

"We've been here about 45 minutes," Gildea said as firefighters packed up their equipment, rolled up their hoses and prepared to leave.

Nobody was inside the structure when it caught fire, Gildea said, and no injuries were reported.

The fire was out by 2 p.m.

Elementary school students on their way home from school stopped on the sidewalk to watch as demolition resumed just minutes after the fire trucks and ambulances left the scene of the fire.

Hatch, Howell bump heads

Utah Sen. Orrin Hatch shakes hands with BYU fans at a tailgate party on the way to Saturday's BYU football game. Hatch made the appearance as part of the campaign trail.

Chris Parkinson/ Daily Universe

The rain did not damper the long campaign weekend for Orrin Hatch and Scott Howell.

Donning a red rain jacket, Hatch greeted BYU students at a tailgate party south of the Cougar Stadium Saturday, as staffers handed out hand-dipped Oreo cookies, labeled "Orrin-o's." The ingredients: honesty, integrity, dedicated and principled.

Also Saturday, Southern Utahns greeted Hatch in the rain as he rode in a covered wagon through Utah towns with Chris Cannon, Mike Leavitt and other elected Utah officials.

The campaign weekend kick-off was a joint address by Scott Howell and Sen. Hatch at the Utah Medical Association annual conference at the University Park Marriott, Salt Lake City.

The UMA luncheon was the first time Hatch and Howell met on the same stage. Addressing elected health care representatives and doctors from all over the state, the opponents debated health care.

"The overriding health care problems have worsened under Senator Hatch's watch," Howell said.

Howell said Hatch is the very reason that prescription drugs such as Claritin cost over $2 a pill when they can be manufactured for 50 cents.

The extended patent on the drug, Howell said, resulted in $1.3 billion in revenue for the company.

"Why do drug prices remain so high?" Howell asked. It is because of the "millions of dollars Orrin has received from these special interest groups for speaking fees and contributions over his tenure. He has fought for patent extensions for big drug companies, he has flown in their jets," Howell said. "It might be legal, but it's unethical."

In response to the accused responsibility for high priced drugs, Hatch rebutted by reminding Howell and the UMA that he was the head of the committee that created the modern generic drug industry in 1984. In addition, Hatch said he has been directly involved in every medical bill that has come through the senate since that point.

There are two battlefronts in the pharmaceutical fight, Hatch said. On one hand you have drug companies who spend a half of a billion dollars in outlays during the 15-year period that it takes for a patent to get approved by the Federal Drug Administration, and on the other hand you have the generic drug industry. We need a bill that merges both, Hatch said. We need to make sure that everyone is treated fairly.

Howell said that he is reviewing the Campbell Bill.

"Something must be done to make it easier for doctors to negotiate with insurance companies," Howell said.

"Instead, some senators are more concerned about the risk of damaging their financial support from insurance companies."

The Campbell Bill, Hatch said, has no co-sponsors in the senate. He said that this is because they know that the bill would be subjected to every trade union law in America.

Drive ends in 250 registered students

By Rachael Wilson

Controversy rose as a local candidate conducted a voter registration drive on campus.

John Curtis, Democratic candidate for the 16th Senate District, appeared on campus Friday to register students to vote.

The controversy began when Curtis began discussing campaign issues and displaying campaign signs.

According to the Student Handbook found on Route Y, campaign materials may be displayed only under the sponsorship of College Republicans, College Democrats and Young Independents.

David Lucero, assistant director of Student Leadership, said the reason Curtis was asked to stop discussing his issues was because College Democrats did not submit a speaker approval form, which is against policy.

Once the situation was recognized, Curtis was told to take down campaign material and to stop discussing issues.

Curtis said he was only trying to help.

"A lot of local and state candidates ignore the students. I came to help them get involved, to register them, and to encourage them to vote," Curtis said.

That he did. In three hours Curtis registered approximately 250 students to vote in the drive sponsored by the BYU College Democrats.

"We wanted to bring Democratic party members on campus to give them interaction with the students and allow them to help register students to vote," said Matt Nelson, 22, a junior from Dallas, majoring in economics and Russian, and also the chairman of the campaign committee for the College Democrats.

"Students need to learn about the issues and meet the candidates. Six thousand votes could decide this election. The students have a chance to have a great impact on the election," Curtis said.

Curtis was then invited by the Student Association Committee to join other local candidates for a town meeting Thursday.

Jewelry ads show switch in gold ring preference

By Karen Lee
KL239@email.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Wedding ring advertisements can be found just about anywhere from billboards to bus benches, but in recent months, ring ads have undergone some colorful changes.

The metamorphosis has occurred in the color of the rings displayed from gold to silver colors. New ads are not for silver rings, but platinum rings that appear silver in color.

Terry Smith, manager of Schubach Jewelry in Orem, said that when jewelers advertise they want to show their best and finest jewelry and for the most part, platinum is the best metal a jeweler has.

Not only is the shift occurring in advertisements, but in sales as well.

Mark Morlock, staff gemologist of Losee Jewelers, said that three years ago there were only three platinum rings in the display cases at his store, but that currently there are over a thousand platinum rings on display daily.

Amanda Chase, assistant manager of JC Keepsake Diamonds, said the increase in platinum sales could be attributed not only to outdoor advertisements but also to advertisements in many of the popular bridal magazines.

Chase said other factors why people are choosing platinum over gold are the facts that platinum is three times stronger than gold and that platinum is much more rare.

According to the Platinum Guild International, a major force behind the push for platinum, is that only 133 tons of platinum is mined annually, compared to 1,782 tons of gold.

Smith said that with this rarity comes a higher price, even three to four times higher prices than gold.

Kamie Millward, assistant manager at Morgan Jewelers in University Mall, said the sales increase may also be explained by the women who are now getting engaged. Millward said that many of these women grew up wearing only silver jewelry because that is all they could afford and that is what they are used to wearing.

"Therefore, when it comes time to get engaged, many women don't want to have to get all new jewelry when they can get an engagement ring to match what they already have," Millward said.

As far as the growing trend of platinum sales is concerned, Craig Evans, manager of Zale's Jewelers in Orem, said couples from Generation X want to be different than their parents and platinum rings are another way to create that separation between the generations.

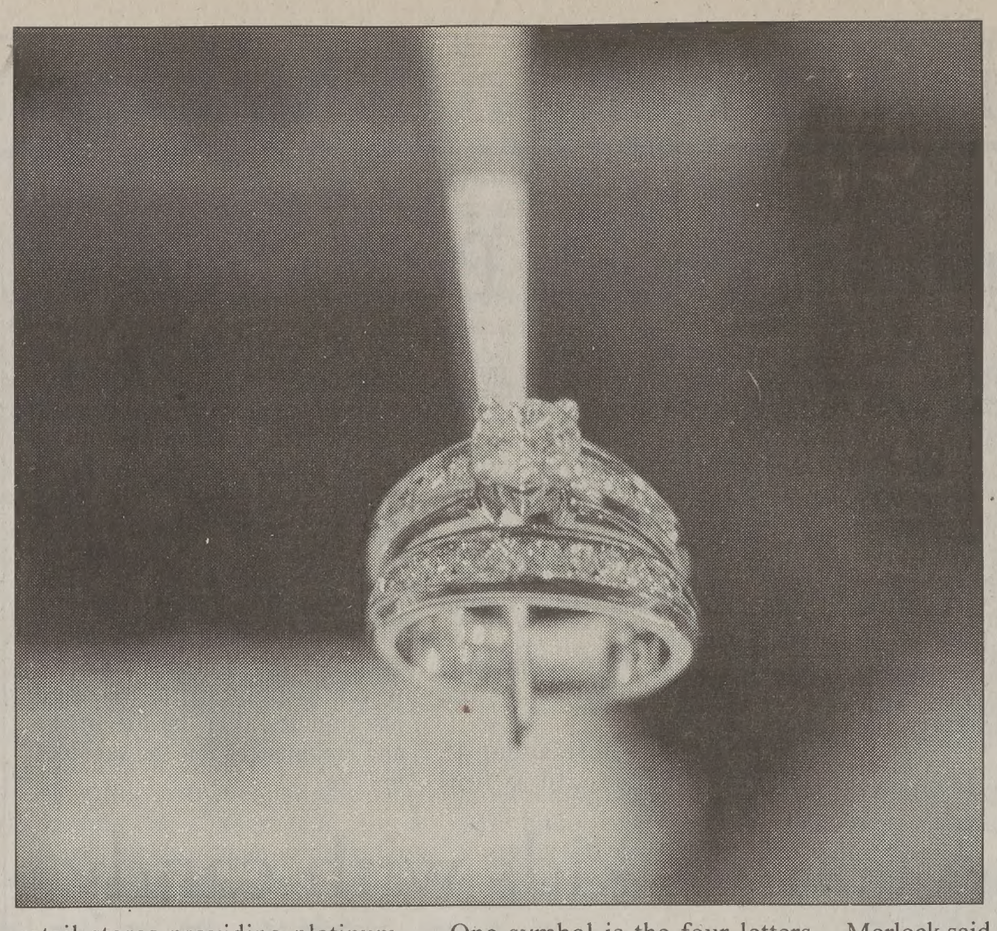
While Generation Xer's platinum ring purchases may differ from the types of rings their parents had, platinum rings are not that different from what their grandparents may have had.

Platinum was popular just before World War II, but popularity faded after the U.S. government banned its use for nonmilitary purposes during the war, Smith said.

James Huckle of England's Johnson Matthey, the world's largest dealer of platinum, said in a Fortune magazine article that because of the ban, a substitute known as white gold was created.

Until about the last decade, platinum has been used mostly in industrial processes, including chemical and petroleum refining and most significantly as the essential element in catalytic converters, according to the article.

The same article mentioned that in more recent years the number of retail stores providing platinum rose from about 100 elite jewelers, like Tiffany and Cartier, to more than 7,000 jewelry stores across the country, thus making the precious metal more available to consumers.



A platinum ring is displayed at Losee Jewelers in Provo. Three years ago the store had only three platinum rings in its case. Now there are over 1,000.

Chris Parkinson/Daily Universe

Because the colors of white gold and silver are similar to platinum, consumers may worry if they are buying a real platinum ring or not. To ease consumer's minds, Morlock said that all platinum rings in the United States are engraved with one of three symbols.

One symbol is the four letters "plat." and the other symbols to look for are the numbers 900 or 950. If the number on the inside of the ring is 925 then the ring is not platinum but sterling silver.

Morlock said another way to tell if a ring is platinum is to hold a gold ring in one hand and a platinum ring in the other. He said that the gold ring would feel as light as cotton candy when compared to the platinum ring that would feel like lead. This is because platinum has a higher density than gold, Morlock said.

Nutritional boosters boom in health-conscious era

Sales of nutritional supplements have boomed in recent years.

Vivienne Lewis began to notice a weakening in her legs and body in her mid-forties. Her doctor informed her she was suffering from post-polio, a resurfacing version of the polio she had as a child.

A friend introduced Lewis to a nutrient drink, promising her more energy, but Lewis was turned off by its high cost. Within days, she was crawling on her hands and knees around her house, overcome with pain and physical weakness. She would wake up in the morning crying. She began taking the nutrient drink and immediately noticed a change in energy and strength. Today she considers the drink an investment in health insurance.

Lewis' case is one success story behind the nutritional-supplement boom of recent years.

The 1994 Dietary Supplement Health and Education Act changed the way supplements were regulated by the Food and Drug Administration. Unlike food additives and drugs, which are closely regulated by the FDA, manufacturers are now given the power and responsibility to determine safety and advertising labels of their products.

Since the 1994 act, supplement sales have become a growing industry. According to a national study conducted by The Hartman Group, between July 1998 and June 1999 the total Vitamin, Mineral, Herbal and Miscellaneous Supplement market sold $10.4 billion. Total purchases exceeded 840 million.

Despite the market rise and popularity of supplements, some experts still question their validity.

The position of the American Heart Association recommends that people acquire nutrients through a variety of foods, rather than from supplements.

"Vitamin and mineral supplements should not substitute for a balanced and nutritious diet designed to limit excess calories, saturated fat and dietary cholesterol," the AHA Web site said.

Most people realize they can't take pills to substitute exercise and good eating, said Steven Pyne, manager of Good Earth Natural Foods in Provo.

"Of course, there are people who want the magic pill," Pyne said.

Pyne said the important thing is that people are not getting adequate nourishment through their diets.

"If you were to look at people's diets today ... their diets stink. They're missing a lot of the nutrients they need," Pyne said.

Susan Fullmer, an assistant teaching professor of food science and nutrition at BYU and a registered dietician, said most students could stand to improve their diets.

Vitamin supplements become important when a person is unwilling to eat a healthy diet, Fullmer said.

However, many vitamins are potentially dangerous at high doses, Fullmer said. Vitamin B6 can cause nerve damage, and high intakes of iron and zinc and Vitamin C have detrimental effects if the dosage is too high, Fullmer said.

"Some feed off the mentality that if some is good, more is better," Fullmer said.

There are two sides to the spectrum, however. People should not be on diets so harsh that they develop a vitamin deficiency, Fullmer said.

"If we would eat from the food pyramid guide, and eat a variety of foods, they would get more than adequate intake," Fullmer said.

Iron is one of the more common deficiencies in the United States, along with folic acid and Vitamin E, Fullmer said. These deficiencies can be reduced by adding more fruits and vegetables to the diet, Fullmer said.

Because the supplement ind... try regulates itself, consum... should be careful in selecti... supplements.

el Bradford, a junior from Hong Kong, majoring in nursing, said Hong Kong badminton is always on TV.

"I lived in Malaysia for years, and badminton was on constantly," Bradford said.

Harris' younger sister, Page Harris, a freshman from Calgary, Alberta, Canada, majoring in business, played on the Junior Canadian National Team before suffering a knee injury in a badminton match.

"All I've seen the last couple of days is gymnastics and swimming," Harris said.

Mike McCarley, a spokesman for NBC, said the better known sports such as basketball, boxing and gymnastics are scheduled to receive more television coverage.

"Obviously there are some sports considered more traditional than others," McCarley said.

However, if a good story takes place in the Olympics, NBC will fit it into the schedule, McCarley said.

""NBC's focus has been storytelling. What it takes is a story," he said.

McCarley gave the example of Nancy Johnson winning the first American gold medal in the 10-meter skeet shooting event the first night of the Olympics.

He said although shooting was not expected to get any coverage, it was covered Friday night because it was a good story.

"Rhythmic gymnastics kills ratings," said Matt Jesperson, a senior from Sunnyvale, Calif., majoring in English.

Jesperson said he would like to see more sporting events covered during the Olympics, such as the trampoline event.

"I can't believe they don't have trampoline Jumping on TV. Everyone would want to see that," Jesperson said.

According to the Olympic Web site, professional trampoline athletes can jump up to 30 feet in the air performing various aerial maneuvers.

Derrick Woodward, a freshman from Alpine, majoring in neuroscience, said he agrees with NBC's lack of coverage.

"I don't think those sports have as big of an audience pull as the others. They're sports I can play in my own back yard," Woodward said.

Ryan Varkevisser, a sophomore from Pretoria, South Africa, majoring in accounting, said, "America likes to show all the sports they excel in. That's probably why you don't see table tennis and badminton on TV. Other countries are going to win those sports."

Angela Smith, a junior from Logan, majoring in biology composite teaching, said that NBC is probably too scared to try anything new.

Smith said she would like to see other sporting events introduced in the Olympics, such as the egg toss and dodge ball.

"I would love to see people get smacked by the ball," Smith said.

The Olympics will be shown on NBC, MSNBC and CNBC until Oct. 1.

Youth basketball referees wanted

American Fork is looking for a few good men. ... and women.

Steve Bailey, American Fork's recreation director, said the city is looking for BYU students to referee youth basketball games.

"We have a lot of people here locally, but we're looking for a few supplementary kids," Bailey said.

With between 1,500 and 2,000 games to referee in American Fork's youth leagues alone, Bailey said that his recreation department can use all the help it can get.

All BYU students would referee in the city's intramural league, Bailey said.

The league consists of players in grades 7-12, divided into three divisions.

Last year seven BYU students participated as referees, Bailey said.

He said he would like to see at least that many again this year.

"We start with games in early December, but we're trying to build up our official base right now so we can see where we're at," Bailey said.

A clinic for all city basketball officials will be in October or November, Bailey said.

According to Bailey, inexperienced basketball officials should make $12 per hour. More experienced officials could make up to $15 per hour.

Bailey said the pay rate is needed to compete with BYU's intramural program.

"We have to pay a little more, because American Fork is so far and we require a full evening's commitment," Bailey said.

BYU's intramural office confirmed that basketball referees in its program are paid, but would not specify the pay rate.

Other Utah County recreation departments are interested in basketball officials from BYU as well.

"We use students a lot. They are usually in good physical condition and have a good knowledge of the game," said Danielle Muirhead, office specialist for Provo Recreation Department.

More information on the program in American Fork is available from Steve Bailey, 763-3080.

President Hinckley speaks to mothers

By Janene Pack
janene@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

> "You have nothing in this world as precious as your children."
> — Gordon B. Hinckley, president of the LDS Church

President Gordon B. Hinckley of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints spoke to the Relief Society at the General Relief Society broadcast Saturday night in the Tabernacle, admonishing members of the LDS Church to avoid tattoos and body piercings.

President Hinckley spoke to the mothers and future mothers in the audience, counseling them to teach their children to seek out good friends, to gain a good education and to respect their bodies.

"You have nothing in this world as precious as your children," President Hinckley said.

President Hinckley read the church's official statement on tattoos and body piercings, which states that "the church discourages tattoos. It also discourages the piercing of the body for other than medical reasons."

President Hinckley added that the LDS Church does not take a stand on women piercing their ears for one pair of earrings.

He also said mothers should teach their children to avoid illegal drugs.

"They must be counseled to shun it, they must be warned to avoid it," President Hinckley said.

Children should be taught to be virtuous and honest, and they should be taught how to pray, President Hinckley said.

"None of us is wise enough to make it on our own. There is no greater resource," he said.

Being instruments in the Lord's hands, the focused theme for the Relief Society's general meeting, featured inspired messages from the Relief Society general presidency: Mary Ellen Smoot and her counselors, Virginia U. Jensen and Sherri Dew. They admonished women everywhere to be instruments in gathering the Lord's sheep back to the fold.

The meeting started out with Sister Smoot, general president of the Relief Society, speaking about service.

"Service softens and opens hearts," Sister Smoot said. "This is the gospel in action."

Sister Smoot talked about obedience, and stressed the importance of keeping all the commandments.

"When obedience becomes a quest, it is no longer an irritation," Sister Smoot said.

Sister Jensen, first counselor in the General Relief Society, built on Smoot's message by urging women to create ripples in other people's lives.

"Simple righteous actions can ripple through the hearts of families and friends around us," Sister Jensen said.

Sister Jensen concluded her message by comparing all women to Mary, the mother of Jesus.

"All women can share in her type of beauty," Sister Jensen said.

Believing hearts, being humble; teachable, pure and full of charity is what makes her type of beauty, Sister Jensen said.

Sister Dew, second counselor in the general Relief Society, spoke to the audience about standing up as women of God and standing out from the rest of the world's people.

"We need to understand who we have always been," Sister Dew said. "Not just who we are."

Happiness comes through service, Sister Dew said.

"If you want to be really happy, nurture someone along the path to Christ," Sister Dew said.

Parents, coaches brawl after youth football gam

Associated Press

PORT ORANGE, Fla. — A youth football ended in a brawl with more than 100 parents, coaches and teen-age players shouting and shoving one another and throwing punches after an overtime touchdown won the game.

Police on Sunday were still debating who started Saturday's melee between the teams of 14- and 15-year-olds from Port Orange and Winter Springs.

A 31-year-old mother from Orlando was charged with resisting arrest, a 15-year-old player was accused of battery on a law enforcement officer for allegedly punching an officer in the face, and police say more charges may result from the altercation, which was videotaped by parents.

Police Cmdr. Michael Sheridan said the brawl began shortly after the home team, the Port Orange Hawks, scored a touchdown in overtime, winning the game 12-6. As the winners left the field, Sheridan said, members of the West Orange Wildcats followed.

"There were some words exchanged and a fight broke out between the coaches and players of both teams," Sheridan [illegible]. "When the fight started, sp[illegible] tors from both sides st[illegible] toward the fight, adding t[illegible] confusion and chaos."

States may have to send back federal health funds

Associated Press

> "We are still enrolling hundreds of children every month, and I would hate to get to a point where we would cut short the children of Utah."
> — Chad Westover, coordinator of state's Children's Health Insurance Program

NEW YORK — Forty states may have to give up hundreds of millions of dollars of federal money earmarked for health insurance for children in low-income families because they haven't used all their allotted funds, The New York Times reported Sunday.

About 45 percent of the $4.2 billion provided in 1997 by Congress hasn't been spent by the states, state and federal officials said.

Any money left after a Sept. 30 deadline will be redistributed to the 10 states that used their full allotments of federal money under the Children's Health Insurance Program, a program created by Congress in 1997.

For Louisiana, that would mean giving up $63.7 million, or 63 percent of its allotment of $101.7 million.

California and Texas — which together have 29 percent of the nation's 11 million uninsured children — stand to lose $590 million and $446.3 million, respectively.

Utah will have to refund about $1.7 million, according to Chad Westover, the state's Children's Health Insurance Program coordinator.

Since August 1998, more than 18,000 Utah children have been enrolled in the program, and state projections say as many as 30,000 may be eligible.

"We are not a mature program, we're only three years old," said Westover "We are still enrolling hundreds of children every month, and I would hate to get to a point based on these allocations where we would cut short the children of Utah."

The states that have used all of their allotments — Alaska, Indiana, Kentucky, Maine, Massachusetts, Missouri, New York, North Carolina, Pennsylvania and South Carolina — will have one year to spend the extra money, after which it will revert to the Treasury.

The Children's Health Insurance Program was designed to help children in families with too much income to qualify for Medicaid and too little to afford private insurance.

Congress in 1997 committed to providing a total of $40 billion for the program nationwide over 10 years: States had three years beginning Oct. 1, 1997, to use the first year's installment of $4.2 billion.

State officials say the program provides care to more than two million children while stimulating improvements in Medicaid. But spending has lagged behind expectations.

Officials in 20 states say they encountered major problems implementing the program because in some cases it took more than a year to start enrollment; some states couldn't find enough eligible children, and others said the complex application procedure deterred enrollment.

"If we enrolled every single eligible child in Colorado, we still couldn't spend our full allocation of federal money. Our economy is doing so well, there are fewer eligible kids than what was estimated when the federal government did its initial allocation of money," said William N. Lindsay, head of the board that supervises the program in Colorado.

Some states complained that the federal government administered the program in such a rigid, inflexible way that it prevented them from spending the money for children who might have benefited.

"The federal law and regulations provided New Mexico with a lot more money than we could possibly use," complained J. Barry Blitzer, deputy secretary of the Human Services Department in New Mexico. "We have 30,000 uninsured kids, of whom no more than 1,000 are eligible for the new program."

Texas drought ends

Associated Press

DALLAS — After 84 days, it finally rained in North Texas.

One minute before midnight Saturday, enough drops had fallen in a rain gauge at the Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport to register 1/100th of an inch — the only measurable rainfall the official rain gauge had taken in since June 30.

Those few drops, and the showers that followed on Sunday, officially ended North Texas' record dry spell. The streak had shattered the previous record of 58 days set during the dust bowl in 1934 and reached again in 1950.

"It's been that long? We need it," said Chris Jenkins, 21, a security guard working at a northwest Dallas office building as the first drops of rain began to fall. It only lasted about 20 minutes, he said, catching him by surprise as he walked to his truck to get change for a vending machine.

North Texans awoke Sunday to a silver sky, soggy ground and scattered showers. The official rainfall by midafternoon, according to the National Weathe[illegible] vice: 15/100ths of an inch.

Former CEO of Times Mirror

"What I Learned from Five Years in the Newspaper Business"

During the five years he was CEO of Times Mirror, Mark Willes demonstrated that newspapers can grow. Creative, integrated product and marketing programs are required for growth in that industry, just as they are in other businesses driven by consumer preferences. Unfortunately, there are still too few newspaper organizations that believe in or are focused on growth. Therefore, newspapers continue to decline in market share. This drop will ultimately cost those who invest in newspapers. More important, the decline is an increasing loss for the communities served by newspapers. Willes' belief in growth when many in the newspaper industry resisted and criticized his changes provides a lesson for all of us as we strive to be successful in our own lives and in the organizations we serve.

Willes joined the Times Mirror as CEO in June 1995 and retired as chair, president, and chief executive officer in April 2000. (In addition, he served as publisher of the Los Angeles Times from October 1997 to June 1999.) Prior to that, Willes was vice chair of General Mills, Inc., Minneapolis, Minnesota. A 15-year veteran of the company, he served as president and chief operating officer as well as executive vice president and chief financial officer before being named vice chair. Willes previously served with the Federal Reserve System and was president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Minneapolis and first vice president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia. He began his career as an assistant professor of finance at the Wharton School, University of Pennsylvania. He received his AB degree from Columbia College, New York City, and his PhD from the Columbia Graduate School of Business.

Willes serves as director of Black & Decker Corporation and The Talbots, Inc. Beginning in January 2001 he will join the faculty of the Marriott School of Management as the visiting distinguished professor of management. Willes is married and the father of five grown children.

Student can't vote but embraces politics

Political laziness is something ome people find hard to stom- ch.

Others are too busy to help efend democracy.

For one BYU student, the polit- al process is too important to aste time on a Saturday morn- g, even through a rainstorm.

"Voting is a privilege," said ahad Saghir, a 19-year-old ajoring in statistics.

But Saghir can not vote.

Saghir is a native of Karachi, hich is on the southern part of akistan. As a citizen of Pakistan, e is not allowed to vote in any .S. elections.

But that has not stopped his volvement.

"I've been involved with the emocratic party since last fall," aghir said.

Saghir is a member of the Col- ge Democrats of BYU. He is so actively involved in the con- ressional campaign of Democrat onald Dunn from Salt Lake ity.

Saturday morning, Saghir spent wo hours with the College emocrats of BYU handing out iers about Dunn.

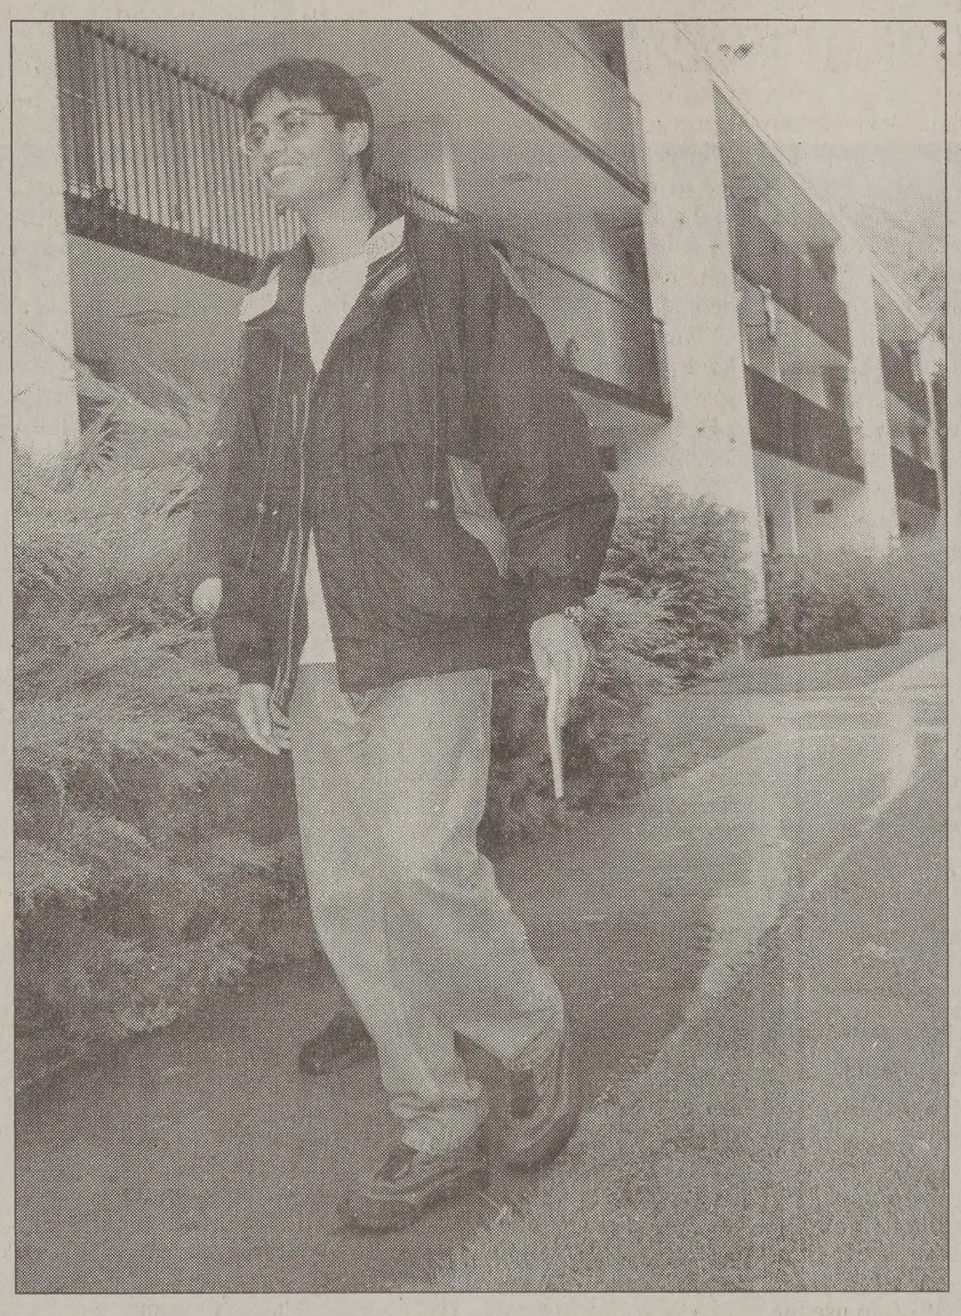
As they began, before getting ompletely soaked by the rain, aghir took five minutes and ught the others what Dunn's atform was and how to help eople register to vote.

"I know it's a bit ironic," Saghir id. "I'm registering others to te, and I can't vote myself."

Saghir has always liked the olitical process in the United ates.

"The process is really clean," aghir said.

In Pakistan political parties are awn according to ethnic lines ather than the issues.



BYU student Fahad Saghir — unable to vote because he is a citizen of Pakistan — hands out fliers Saturday for the College Democrats of BYU.

Christijan Draper/ Daily Universe

"Here you use your morals to justify what you decide," Saghir said.

Saghir chose to join the Democratic Party because of its stance on domestic issues. Saghir is specifically concerned with education.

"Utah has the lowest spending per child for school in the U.S.," Saghir said. "We need to fix that."

For a country as privileged as the United States, more has to be done to guarantee the future of the democracy, Saghir said. Education is the key, he said.

United States citizens should be more involved politically, Saghir said.

"If they respect the Constitution, they should respect the right to vote," Saghir said.

Survey: Students wiser, want more challenges

> "To challenge yourself, you now need to get a masters. The bachelors just does not cut it."
> — Justin Rauzon, BYU junior

Cramming for tests, late-night study groups and countless lab hours — all just to re-learn high school curriculum.

According to the Foundation for Academic Standards and Tradition (FAST), a nonprofit student advocate organization, students are questioning their education.

FAST sponsored two national phone surveys conducted by Zogby International.

Each surveyed 1,000 randomly selected students. One survey focused on student life and the other focused on academic life.

According to the surveys, students are requiring more than what their universities have to offer.

"On basic matters of education, such as aspiration, students appear wiser than their schools. Schools need to rededicate themselves to helping students to become their best selves," said FAST president Marc Berley.

The surveys reported that 68.7 percent of college students want their professors to challenge them more.

BYU faculty members are rising to the challenge of challenging their students.

"The average ACT and GPA requirements of incoming BYU freshmen are continuing to rise," said D. Cecil Clark, associate chair of teacher education.

BYU faculty members are now standing in front of increasingly bright kids. They are now challenged to update curriculum and be themselves on the cutting edge of their field, Clark said.

According to the FAST surveys, more students view a college degree as a social requirement than view it as a guarantee of valuable skills.

"To challenge yourself, you now need to get a masters. The bachelors just does not cut it," said Justin Rauzon, 21, a junior from Coto de Caza, Calif., majoring in zoology.

Statistics are increasingly showing that students with a college education have a higher overall income for graduates with a bachelor's as opposed to students with out college education, Clark said.

While some depend on their professors and classes for their education, others students do not.

"You can make school as challenging as you want it to be," said Jeff Jensen, 21, a sophomore from Irvine, Calif., majoring in computer engineering. "Education is a personal commitment you can't depend on someone

Students' opinions on FHE purpose, benefits vary

The question is tossed around, debated d batted among roommates each Mon- y night: Who is going to family home ening?

Tuffer Patrick, 23, a junior from Upland, alif., majoring in exercise science, won't there tonight. Instead he'll be at home dying, watching TV or hanging out with s friends.

Patrick said he doesn't go because he's t interested and doesn't see the purpose it.

He went once before, when his room- ate was in charge of an activity, but has- been back since. He has other things to do.

Family home evening, a program to promote family unity and spiritual growth, is held in homes of members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints throughout the world each Monday night. It is even held among people away from their families — like students in college wards.

Family home evening helps give students a home away from home, said Lyle Packer, bishop of the BYU 156th ward.

Adam Taylor, 25, a senior from Ames, Iowa, majoring in biology composite teaching, attends family home evening regularly. But this hasn't always been the case.

Shortly after arriving at BYU, Taylor started skipping family home evening in his student ward because he was bogged down with school and wasn't interested in the activities.

He said he returned a month and a half later, because he felt a real void in his life.

Taylor said family home evening is important both socially and spiritually.

"It helps prepare us for the future, to get ready for our own families, and it builds friendships," Taylor said.

It is the social aspect that Patrick resents.

"The only reason people go to family home evening is because there are hot people in the ward," Patrick said.

Patrick said he would be more likely to attend family home evening if it were more organized and more spiritual.

Spencer Farris, 23, a senior, from Englewood, Colo., majoring in finance, said he agreed with Patrick.

Before getting married, Farris rarely attended family home evening because he was busy with work and school; he didn't have time for one more social activity.

"I never felt a void from not going," Farris said. "I feel like family home evening is for families, not for singles."

Packer said that family home evening is important for everyone, including students.

Students need to have a balance. Family home evening in student wards brings students together, provides uplifting spiritual experiences, and prepares them for their own families, Packer said.

Although Patrick recognizes the benefits family home evening can offer, he doesn't see the point of all the activities.

"If I want to have fun, I can hang out with my friends anytime," he said.

"We are growing big-time and not just with black students but all groups—whites, Asians, Polynesians. That's what I'm looking for," Pixton said.

Siobhan Olliverre, 19, a sophomore from Vancouver, Wash., majoring in sociology, said BSU has helped her in finding people she can relate to and in becoming better acquainted with BYU.

"BYU is very Caucasian-ruled," said Michelle Palmer, vice-president of BYUSA Clubs and Organizations.

Students from different cultures may feel like there's not a lot to relate to, and it helps to belong to a group, Palmer said.

Pixton, who transferred from Ricks College, said her experience at BYU has been good so far.

"I know that any place you go is what you make of it. Some people have personal demons they must deal with. We need to put aside stereotypes on both sides," she said.

One such stereotype that Pixton hopes to overcome is the perception that the BSU is "cliquish."

"I want BYU to know that the Black Student Union is for everyone. We can create cultural unity on campus," she said.

Improvement workshops focus on women, family

Seminars seek to nurture the nation through women

By Bethany Park
bethany@newsroom.byu.edu

Gain self esteem, find balance in life, make voice heard; all are common themes for self-improvement workshops designed for women.

A large number of lectures, conferences, and workshops are designed for women.

In October Senator Orrin Hatch will sponsor a conference for women's issues. BYU Women's Services provides workshops throughout the semester.

Thanksgiving Point hosted a women's program luncheon Saturday with guest speaker Carole Mikita of KSL-TV.

And every Wednesday for the months of September and October, UVSC features a class for women taught by Connie Sokol of the Teleios Group. The class deals with "balancing life and finding fulfillment."

Sokol explained the reason women are the target of improvement workshops is their need for progression. Through progression women find balance, which provides a way for them to enjoy life whether at home or in the work force, Sokol said.

Women movements of the past have brought equality for women and allowed them opportunities in the work force as well as a voice.

Sokol said today women carry more responsibility but not always by choice.

"The more society is crumbling the more the family is the focus, and it comes down to the women. If you nurture a woman, you nurture a family, which nurtures a nation," Sokol said.

Sokol started the Teleios Group in 1997. She said the group is committed to cultivating the complete woman.

Sokol said she found that most people attending her class were women trying to work at home and raise their families. Through the class these women expressed their need for balance and stress relief.

"Many women lack a dream, they feel stale and restless like they are living what they are supposed to and they don't give themselves permission to feel unfulfilled in their life," Sokol said.

BYU Women is a program that started 70 years ago, designed as a social outlet for the wives of BYU faculty members.

Martha Henstrom, president of BYU Women, said the program has met many of her needs. She has been a member for 40 years.

She said each time she attended the program she felt richly rewarded through learning and developing friendships with other women.

"Women need social interaction," said Alauna Fletcher, 21, senior from Alberta, Canada, majoring in physics teaching.

BYU Women Services provide workshops on topics such as body image and relationships. The program attracts more than just women.

"Men attend and should attend these workshops. They are often curious about their role in what women think of themselves," Lanea Valentine, director of Women's Services said.

BYU student builds label and new music on values

Contemporary LDS music may never be the same.

Andrew R. Howells, 20, a student of the BYU independent study program from Mission Viejo, Calif., has started his own music label.

Sentinel Music Co. was registered in June and released its first album "Next Door To Eden" last week.

Howells is not only the label's owner, but also its star. He is the album's songwriter, producer and featured vocalist.

"I love music, but the LDS norm isn't music that you can tap your foot to in the car. And the radio alternatives are just too much," Howells said.

Howells said he wanted to create something that was radio playable but with a message to match his beliefs.

Howells' hopes his first project has done just that.

"We both wanted to create music that is value based, yet away from the LDS norm. I think the quality of the album was exceptional," Jennifer Marco-Handy, a vocalist who sang a duet and backup vocals on the album said.

Howells' album professes to be music that "shouts with glory, whispers with praise, and leaves you with peace."

College students might think that starting a music label and recording an album solo would be a challenge.

Marco-Handy said it was a brave thing to do. "It is scary to hire producers, get material, and record an album," She said.

"The biggest challenge that I face daily is my age. People look at me and see a 20 year old, not an entrepreneur. Most labels are time honored, and have paid their dues," Howells said.

Sentinel has big plans to tour for its premier artist and make new albums.

"I am looking for groups that are contemporary and out of the ordinary, with a fresh, uplifting take on music," said Howell.

Ron Simpson, general manager of BYU's music label, Tantara Records, said the music industry is full of stories of young guys with a dream, Barry Gordy founded Motown Records as a young man.

MDT student joins Universal Studios, planning move to Osaka, Japan soon

By Benjamin Griffiths

Laurel Sandberg has studied music since her childhood. She was recently selected to perform at Universal Studios, Japan.

Universal Studios is going to Japan, and BYU is going with it.

Auditions were held Sept. 16 to fill parts needed when Universal Studios opens in Osaka, Japan.

After seeing a flyer in the HFAC, Laurel Sandberg, 18, a music, dance and theater major from Plymouth, Minn., decided to try her luck.

"I was just going for fun .... I didn't think anything would come of it," Sandberg said.

"They had me bring in music, and we sang for them. There were two more dance auditions, followed by personal interviews," she said.

Sandberg said she was separated from the auditions after that.

"I was about to protest that I had already had an interview when the lady offered me a part in the '50s quartet," Sandberg said. "I didn't believe her until she had repeated the offer a couple of times. I was so overwhelmed, I just sat there and cried," she said.

A music enthusiast since childhood, Sandberg has extensive experience onstage.

"I took classes from the Children's Theater Co. in Minneapolis for five years and was blessed enough to get large roles in a number of different musicals."

Some of the musicals she has performed in include "Joseph," "A Midsummer Nights Dream," "The Secret Garden" and "The Fantasies," she said.

Although Sandberg's schedule hasn't been decided yet, Universal Studios officials have given her a departure window stretching from Dec. 26 through Jan. 10 to start practicing for the park's opening.

Sandberg said her contract runs for nearly a year.

Universal Studios has not released an official opening date for its Osaka park, but they project the opening to be in spring 2001.

Two other freshman MDT students, Tiffany Winkel, 20, from Apple Valley, Calif., and Mackenzie Greimann, 20, from Blue Earth, Minn., are also under consideration for major parts.

Turntables, graffiti and rhyme — origins of hip-hop exhibit in N.Y

Associated Press

NEW YORK — They seem unlikely items for a museum exhibit — sneakers, handbills, a microphone.

Viewed along with clothing, lyric sheets and album posters, they document the rise of one of the biggest cultural phenomena of the last 25 years: hip-hop.

"Hip-Hop Nation: Roots, Rhymes, and Rage" opened Friday at the Brooklyn Museum of Art, the first stop in a national tour. The exhibit aims to examine the origins of an art form that started in the Bronx and today spans the globe.

"The world is embracing a new attitude, and that attitude is influenced by hip-hop," said museum director Arnold Lehman.

"Hip-hop has empowered so many of us, it's unbelievable," said guest curator Kevin Powell, who has been writing about the music and culture of hip-hop for years.

The exhibit originated at the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in Cleveland and was expanded for its New York debut.

There are hundreds of pieces to look at, from graffiti art to Public Enemy's set list, to a document from the 1994 U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee hearings on music and violence.

Fashion looms large, with clothing donated by names from every era of hip-hop. There's a hat from Kool DJ Herc, tennis shoes from Run D.M.C., a suit worn by the Notorious B.I.G. and a jersey worn by DMX.

"We wanted this to be very visual," Powell said.

Four elements of hip-hop culture are highlighted: DJ-ing, MC-ing, dance and graffiti art.

The first section, "The Block Party," introduces viewers to those four elements with demonstrations and interactive terminals where they can try their hand at being DJs.

"The Roots" looks at hip-hop's origins, and showcases audio equipment from the 1970s and early 1980s as well as items related to pioneers like Grandmaster Flash and Kurtis Blow.

Section three deals with the mid-1980s to 1990, considered hip-hop's creative "Golden Era." It introduces acts like the political Public Enemy, the feminist Latifah and the gangsta N.

"Controversy: Outrage a Rise of Gangsta Rap" focu the 1990s, which were mar events like the deaths of Shakur and the Notorious

The last section, "Pop G Culture," examines how has come to dominate An youth culture.

While trying to be thorou exhibit does not try to definitive retrospective, said.

"I hope that people und that this is an introductio history of hip-hop," he s hope people will want t more about this incredi form, this urban folk art."

The exhibit will be at th um through the end of t accompanied by workshop and performances.

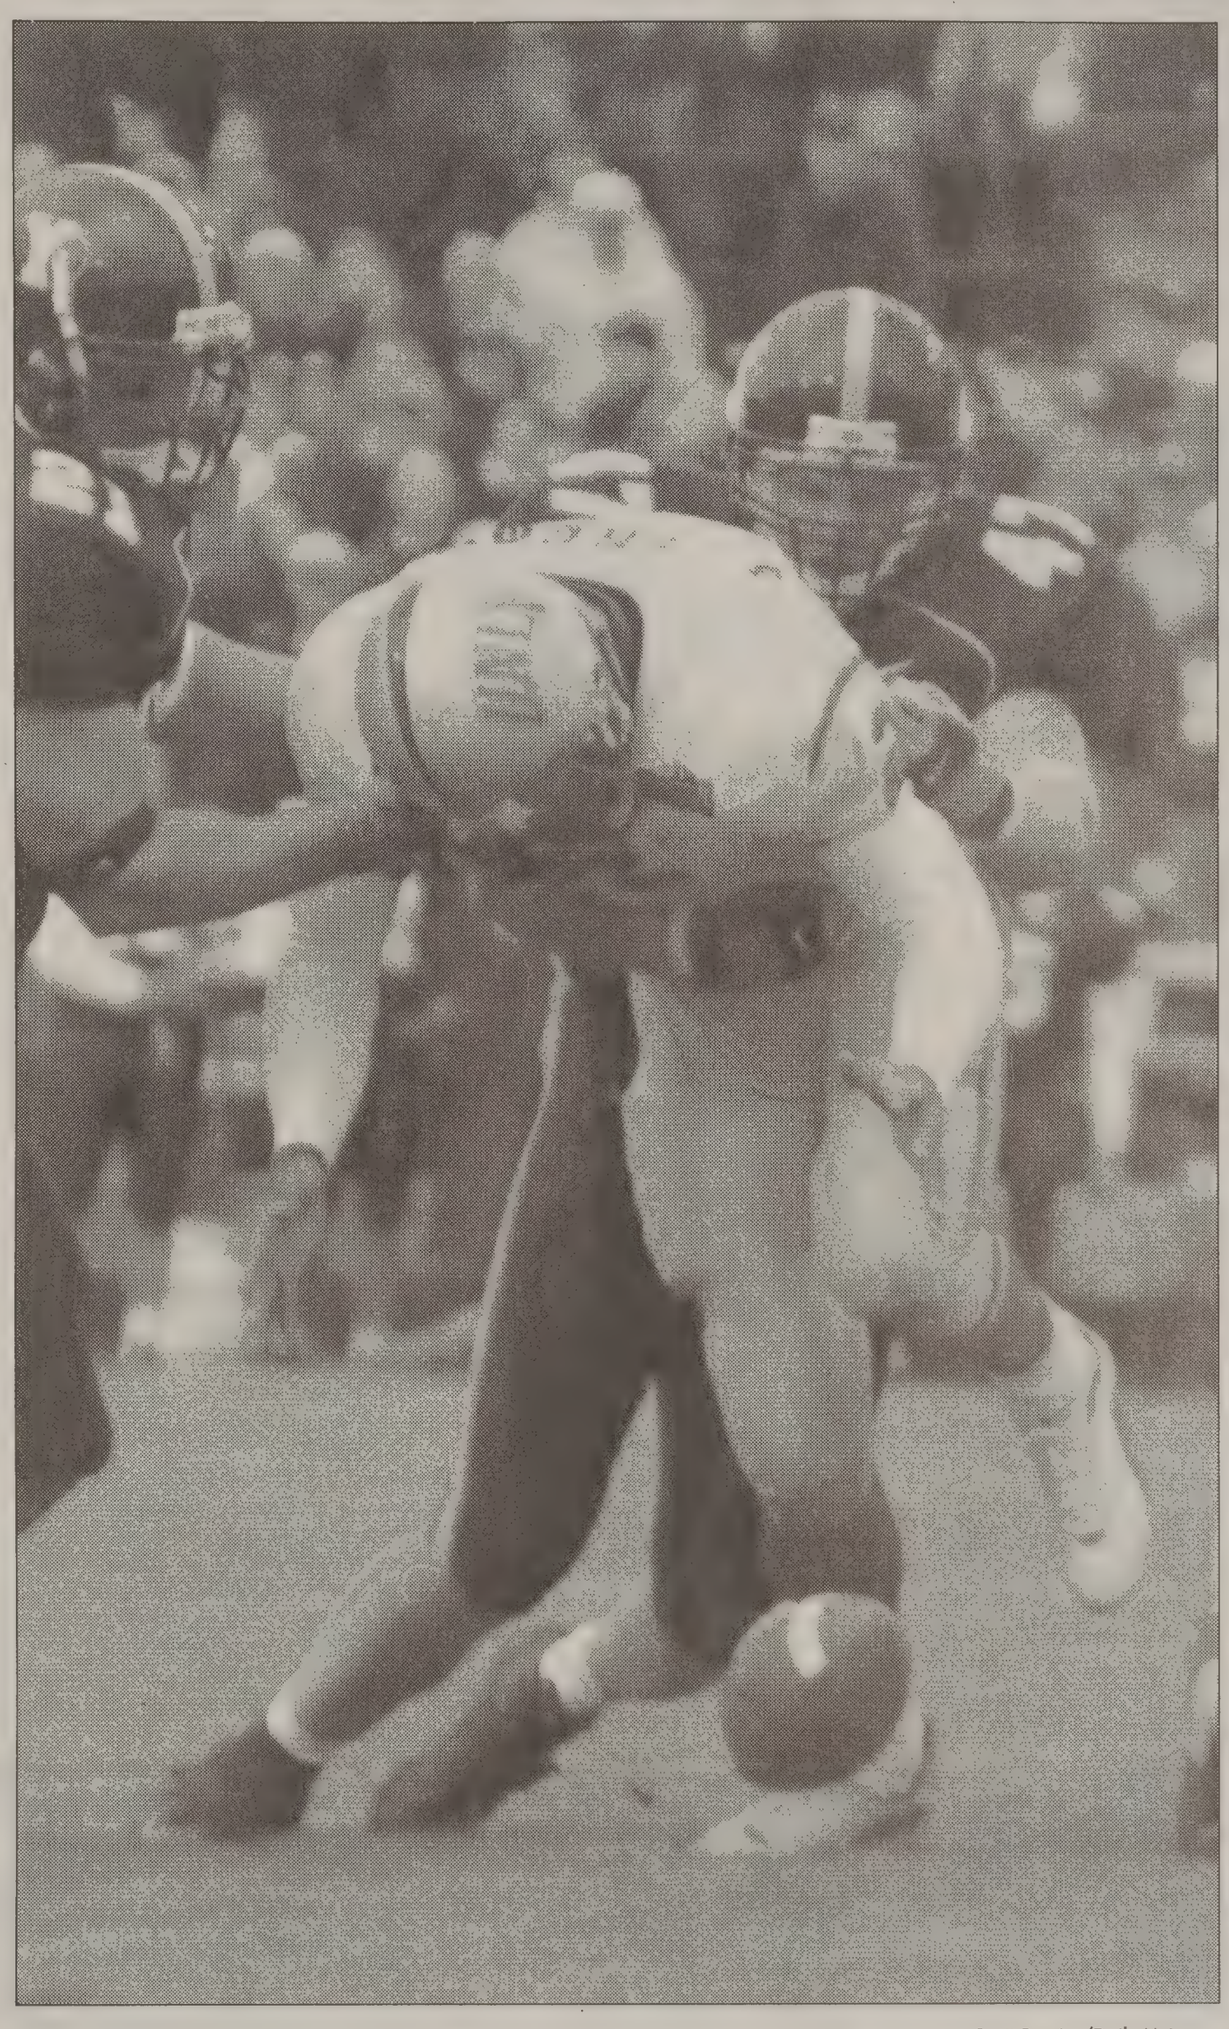
Sweet success for BYU, win 10-7



Scott Pereira/Daily Universe

Linebacker Paul Walkenhorst forces UNLV quarterback Jason Thomas to fumble the ball. The BYU defense forced four fumbles Saturday and recovered one.

By Stephenson Beck
stephenson@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

UNLV's offense came into Provo riding high after scoring 38 points against North Texas.

Unfortunately for the Rebels, BYU is not North Texas.

The defense made 10 first quarter points hold up through the game, shutting out the Rebels for three quarters and holding them to 41 yards rushing as BYU defeated UNLV 10-7 at Cougar Stadium Saturday.

"A win is a win. All will be good in happy valley for a week," said defensive tackle Chris Hoke. "We played tough — the whole defense. Hans (Olsen) and I owned the middle, and we had tons of sacks — like 70."

Actually the total was five, and the defense recorded 12 tackles for losses.

The defense's biggest play may have been with 7:50 to play in the first half.

UNLV drove to the BYU 12-yard line and attempted a 29-yard field goal. Freshman Paul Walkenhorst burst through the middle and blocked the kick, and UNLV would never make up the three points.

The defensive line made a good push up the middle and no one picked him up, Walkenhorst said.

Rebel quarterback James Thomas led UNLV's offense, passing for 202 yards and rushing for 51.

"James Thomas was everything we thought he was going to be," head coach LaVell Edwards said. "But we did stop their running attack."

Quarterback Bret Engemann, who reinjured his ankle in the third quarter, said he agreed.

"Our defense played great," Engemann said. "They along with Luke won the game for us today."

Running back Luke Staley provided most of the offense for BYU, rushing for a career high 167 yards on 28 carries.

It was the first time Staley had rushed for over 100 yards in a collegiate game.

"We went in with the idea in mind that we would run it, and a healthy Luke Staley makes all the difference in the world," Edwards said.

After defensive tackle Hans Olsen recovered a fumble, BYU drove 55 yards on six plays, capped by running back Brian McDonald's 25-yard touchdown run. BYU ran the ball five times on the drive.

Kicker Owen Pochman added a 42-yard field goal on BYU's next possession.

After the first quarter, BYU's offense stalled and failed to score again.

Engemann completed 7 of 18 passes and was intercepted once before his injury.

Junior Charlie Peterson fared better, completing 8 of 11 passes for 95 yards, but the offense failed to score in the second half.

UNLV closed within three early in the fourth quarter on Thomas' 1-yard touchdown run with 12:41 remaining. But the Cougar defense stopped the Rebels on their next drive, and BYU's offense gained three first downs to run out the clock.

"We're just not going to make it easy," Edwards said. "The fact it was a tough game didn't surprise me. UNLV is a good team. This was huge for us. We needed a victory in the worst way."

Cougars still could be MWC bread winners with Rebel win

By Clairissa Pett

BYU football coach LaVell Edwards summed up the Cougars' season in one sentence when he opened the UNLV post-game press conference Saturday.

"We're sure not gonna make it easy."

Easy? No, all five of BYU's games this season have been anything but.

Yet, of all the years to have a schedule that seems to have been created by George Steinbrenner, Bobby Knight and Satan himself, this would be it.

BYU opened up the first four weeks of its schedule 1-3 and could still go home the Mountain West Conference bread winner.

The conference title is anyone's for the taking.

It is a fresh chocolate chip cookie, waiting to be plucked from the oven and enjoyed.

And with BYU's 10-7 victory over UNLV – anemic offense et al – the Cougars are still in the running.

Sure, there are the favorites.

Air Force sits a top the standings with a perfect 3-0 record followed closely by Colorado State.

Colorado State, the defending conference champion, sits at 2-1 as the only team besides Air Force to be above .500. But the Rams are dealing with the loss of their star linebacker Adam Wade, who is out for the season after suffering a knee injury at Arizona State.

The 13-10 loss to the Sun Devils last week took the Rams out of the AP Top 25 poll and shattered any hopes of an undefeated season and a national ranking.

Preseason media and coaches polls put Utah as the clear favorite. But the Utes are 0 and 4 with their first three losses against Pac-10 teams and a loss Saturday to Air Force.

It will take a miracle to climb out of the hole they've dug themselves into.

"I picked them (Utah) to win the Mountain West Conference this year because we couldn't vote for our own team," Air Force coach Fisher DeBerry said in a press conference last week.

San Diego lost its senior QB Jack Hawley with a fractured vertebra and is left with a redshirt sophomore.

Wyoming and San Diego have a slew of injuries to deal with, making their run for the title unlikely. Meanwhile, New Mexico has struggled against Oregon State and Boise State.

But more important is BYU itself.

The Mountain West is 0-fer against Pac-10 teams, blemishing some rather confident would-be records, but Edwards is leaning on what he sees as a break in the storm clouds.

"Conference games are different," he said. "This was huge. We needed a victory in the worst way."

The UNLV win peeled the scab off BYU's wounds from its first four weeks of the season.

Even with a fresh start, look what BYU has done so far.

The Cougars held defending national champion Florida State to 57 yards rushing and only seven second-half points.

They staged a miracle comeback against Virginia, scoring 38 points in the second half and overtime.

Take away those 21 points BYU gave up to Mississippi State's defense and the Cougars were in that one, too.

BYU proved it could make the offensive adjustments it would need to win a big game as it did against UNLV, concentrating on its running game and squeezing over 100 yards out of newly rehabilitated running back Luke Staley.

"We haven't been running the ball (in the first four games)," wide receiver Margin Hooks said. "That was pretty much our ticket."

The adjustments BYU makes from here could make or break the season and determine the road it takes.

The Cougars recognize their potential. They possess enough zeal and talent to win the conference title.

Only time will tell.

NOTES:

In light of LaVell Edward's last season as BYU head football coach, each conference team has awarded Edwards with a gift before kick off.

Air Force coach Fisher DeBerry presented a small wooden Falcon.

But UNLV's John Robinson set the precedence. Robinson surprised Edwards with two round-trip tickets to Hawaii.

"College football is better off today because of LaVell Edwards," Robinson said. "He has built a national program ... he is a shining example of what a coach should be."

KICK FOR CASH: BYU fan Tom Sheffield was the recipient of $10,000 after kicking a 40-yard field goal during a Gold's Gym first quarter promotional contest.

NO BUTTERFINGERS HERE: Wideout Margin Hooks carried on his streak for consecutive catches in a game with 29 against UNLV.

Cougs sweep conference openers

By Brian Hintze

After Jackie Bundy's thundering spike against San Diego State Saturday night, the Cougars went on a 25-5 scoring run to complete the sweep of their first two conference games of the season.

BYU began the weekend by rolling over UNLV in four games 15-5, 15-1, 4-15, and 15-8 Friday and then went on to defeat San Diego State Saturday night in straight games, 15-11, 15-7, and 15-5.

BYU started off slow against the Aztecs and were not able to get into a rhythm in their offense.

"We could feel that we weren't as energized in the first part of the match tonight," middle blocker Nina Puikkonen said.

That lack of energy showed as the team struggled to pull out a win in the first game, trailing at one point 10-11.

Down 5-6 in the second game and battling to keep their head above water, Bundy rose above the net and sent a rocket past the San Diego State block and the crowd erupted.

From this point, BYU went on a 10-1 run to finish game two and had no problem finishing off San Diego to start conference play 2-0.

"The main difference is that they (BYU) served really well and they went after the players we told them to," said head coach Elaine Michaelis.

Bundy and Puikkonen finished the match with .429 and .375 attack percentages respectively and compiled the two highest block totals of the night as well.

Also, after hitting a dismal .105 and .111 as a team in the first two games, BYU crushed the ball in the third game versus the Aztecs attacking at a scorching .500 percent.

With the victory Saturday night, Michaelis reached the 850-win plateau and became the second most winning coach in NCAA volleyball history.

As the crowd cheered her on, she graciously pointed her team as if to say they are the ones who do the work, applauded for them.

"She's been with us and she knows the game inside and out. We do it for her," Puikkonen said.

"She is the eternal optimist," Bundy said.

Friday night after dominating UNLV in the first two games and dropping the third game 4-15, the momentum was slipping away form the Cougars.

Down 4-6 in the fourth game Natalie Whittaker came off of the bench, served three straight points, and gave the momentum back to her team.

BYU then went on an 11-2 run and closed out the first match of conference with a victory.

Sunny Tonga led BYU versus the Aztecs with 10 kills a .588 hitting percentage and Puikkonen torched them with 11 kills and a .450 attack rate.

Although BYU came away with two victories this weekend they left serious room for improvement.

"We may have won the first two games of conference but we still have things we need to work on: basically, defense and making things more crisp," Puikkonen said.

"We need to focus on playing smart and cutting down on errors," Bundy added.

With the first two conference games behind them, the Cougars will now take on Weber State in the Smith Fieldhouse Tuesday at 7 p.m.

After Weber State, the Cougs must go on a three-game road trip facing conference foes Colorado State, Wyoming, and Utah.

"We need to make adjustments to prepare for the next three teams that we play. They all have good slide attacks. It will be a matter of keeping the pass out of there so that they can't run those attacks," Michaelis said.

Runners show dep in weekend runs

Women grab first place

The BYU women's cross country team is on its way to successfully defending last year's NCAA National Championship after taking first place at this weekend's Great American Cross Country Festival in North Carolina.

The No. 6-ranked women's team claimed the second, fourth and sixth finishing spots in a field of over 200 runners at Charlotte's McAlpine Greenway Park on Friday.

Lindsey Thomsen was BYU's all-around team leader taking second place overall in the competition.

She nearly captured the first-place all around title after battling it out over the last half mile of the race with Kenya native Sylvia Chelimo of Gardner-Webb University.

Patrick Shane, BYU women's cross country coach, said he was pleased with his team's performance at the meet.

He was especially optimistic about the future of the team's No. 1 finisher.

"I was just elated with Lindsey Thomsen's race today," Shane said. "She beat some of the best people in the country. If we can keep her healthy she's going to have a phenomenal year."

Teammates sophomore Sarah Ellett and senior Sharolyn Shields-Thayer closely followed Thomsen by taking fourth and sixth place respectively.

Other top finishers for the BYU squad included freshmen Katie Martin and Nan Evans.

Competition at the event included strong cross country teams in No. 5 Georgetown and No. 8 North Carolina State.

In cross country, a team's score is taken from the top five placing runners on the team.

If a runner places first in the race, the team receives one point. If another runner places third, the team receives three additional points and so on.

The lower the score the better for the team.

BYU's five top runners all finished in the top-15 giving the Cougars a total score of only 38 points.

The closest contenders were N.C. State with 61 points and Georgetown with 104 points.

Another important factor in cross country running is the spread at which the team runs.

A team will try to stay close together on the course in order to push each other and keep s low.

BYU's top five runners ished the course within 34 of each other helping the C to a first-place overall finis

Women split games in Milwaukee roadtrip

J women's soccer had a coaster of a weekend in aukee Friday and Saturday, g both a win and a loss to ougar stats.

Cougars played a total of hours of soccer all weekend but were only able to walk with one win against nsin-Milwaukee, falling to uette for the first time in soccer history.

played well for the first y minutes, but after that we n't score and no one ed up," Cougar coach fer Rockwood said of the uette game.

is was a very disappointing We have to be more consis- and cannot keep giving up le goals – in all three of our s, we outplayed and outshot pponents and we can't con- to give up the points" she Cougars lead 1-0 from a goal scored early in the first half by BYU's Natalyn Lewis but surrendered Marquette's two points in the back half of the game.

Marquette's game-winning shots came from two corner kicks that found their way past BYU goalie Jennifer Waldron and into the back of the net.

The Cougars were unable to recover and the game ended in a 2-1 Marquette win.

However, they did not remain in the loser's division for long. The Cougars worked their way back from Friday's loss to take the win with a shutout from Wisconsin-Milwaukee Saturday afternoon.

"Things did not come easy for us," Rockwood said. "We struggled in the first half and couldn't find our rhythm. We need to give it our all and find a way to win."

But Rockwood was pleased with the win, and with the defensive efforts of goalie Kylie Dickson who helped the Cougars secure the shutout.

Dickson has performed well for the Cougars lately — Saturday's game was the second game Dickson has started and her second shutout of the season.

BYU's offensive efforts, however, were not capitalized on until the middle of the second half when Kim Lowe scored off of Sarah Higham's assist. Michelle Jensen Peterson used a kick from Jennie Christianson to score the final Cougar goal minutes before the game ended.

The win was a landmark for coach Rockwood as it was the 100th win of her BYU soccer career, with her six-year record now standing at 100-25-1.

The Cougars return home this week for two games on familiar turf. BYU will go against the University of Southern California on Thursday and face Arizona State Saturday. Both games will be played at South Field at 7 p.m.

Utah State scored first and that was all the BYU men's soccer team would need for motivation.

"After they scored we were a little embarrassed," said senior forward Nate Lowe.

The Cougars quickly turned things around when freshman forward Matt Foulger scored to tie the game at 1-1.

Before halftime, junior midfielder Casey Waldron gave the Cougars the lead.

Once the team found their groove, they punished the Aggies with four more goals in the second half and walked away with a 6-2 victory.

"We were surprised. Utah State usually gives us a better game," said BYU assistant coach Brian Jolley.

In years past the Aggies have given the Cougars fits.

Traditionally, Utah State has been a tough game that is full of taunting and fights. This year was different.

"They took some cheap shots but there was no fighting this year," Lowe said.

However, sophomore defender, Tom Foster and Lowe were disappointed by the Aggies' efforts to talk trash.

Apparently, the Cougars' outstanding performance was enough to silence Utah State and their feisty crowd.

"They had a lot of hustle, but when they got tired, they had nothing," Foster said.

BYU was victorious even without starting forwards Lehi Mackissack and Brad Peterson who are both nursing minor injuries. The Cougars also played without head coach Chris Watkins who is out of town with the women's soccer team.

In place of Mackissack and Peterson, freshmen Foulger and Garret Hansen stepped up and played quite well, Jolley said.

"We had too much speed and skill up top and on the wings that they couldn't hang with us," Jolley said.

BYU was led in scoring by senior forward Daniel Yescas' two goals. Senior midfielder Bryce Jolley and Foster both added goals for the Cougars.

> "They took some cheap shots, but there was no fighting this year."
> — Nate Lowe, BYU forward

The victory extended the Cougars' winning streak to five games and improved their record to 5-1-1.

The team will have their hands full this weekend, as they will try to extend their winning streak to seven games.

"This weekend will be big," Jolley said.

The Cougars will face their toughest competition of the year when they face Colorado State on Friday and Weber State on Saturday. Both teams participated in the final four of the Collegiate Club National Championship last season.

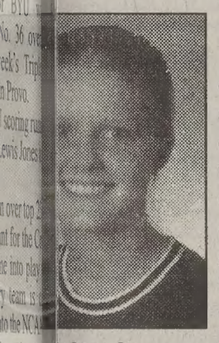
Soccer sacrifice worth it for Y player hile most freshmen struggle o to complete American age and still find time to go n Friday night, freshman ha Cramer has much more orry about — namely the ss of the women's soccer team.



Aliesha Cramer

Cramer, a 5-10 midfielder, has made a significant contribution to the Cougars since she signed to play for BYU this year. She has scored two goals and made five assists this season. But, as a midfielder, her glory doesn't center directly around the goalie box.

Cramer's renown comes from her amazing ball-handling skills and passing ability. She is basically in charge of setting up the game for the rest of the team — and she loves it.

"I like playmaking and that's a lot of what midfield does. I just like to distribute," Cramer said. "Scoring goals is how you win, but that's not what makes a good player. An assist is just fine for me."

And the style in which Cramer delivers her assists should be just fine by anyone's standards. She has a feel for the game which evidences itself in her passes.

Cramer knows where her teammates are on the field — or where they are going to be — and lands the ball squarely in their lap nearly 95 percent of the time.

"Aliesha is a smooth player with great vision," said head coach Jennifer Rockwood of the freshman prodigy. "She does really well at finding other players and setting them up. She is fun to watch."

And it's no wonder. She's played soccer since she was six years old, and has continually worked her way up the ladder of soccer success. Cramer was the top player in the country when BYU recruited her.

The highlight of her career came last summer when the all-American was recruited to train with the Olympic team for three months.

"To get to spend three months playing soccer every day with the best players in the world is a chance not many people get," she said. "I am lucky to have gained so much experience."

And, although Cramer has a plethora of soccer experience, the college experience is still new to her.

Cramer worries about finding time for her studies and making new friends, but she feels that the many hours per week she spends on the soccer field have not robbed her of her college experience.

"I am just so used to playing soccer. I realize that you have to give up some of your social life, but in the long run you will reach your goals," Cramer said.

Cramer has lofty goals. She plans on staying with BYU her entire college career; she loves the team and the atmosphere in Provo, but after that she wants to make the women's national team.

Cramer realizes this will take much work and sacrifice to achieve since soccer is getting more competitive and players are getting better at a younger age.

Just look at Cramer, for example — but it is what she wants.

"I love playing soccer, and I guess when you love something it's not much of a sacrifice," she said.

Burger King robberies raise safety concerns

By Emma Barrett
emma@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Chris Parkinson/ Daily Universe

This Burger King at 1075 S. State Street in Orem has been robbed three times this year. The manager of the Burger King is speaking out about safety concerns in all of Orem.

Three robberies at one Orem Burger King have caused manager Brad Collins to speak out about safety concerns in the city.

Collins, manager of the Burger King at 1075 S. State, in Orem, said his restaurant was robbed in January, February and September.

Collins said he thinks Orem needs more police officers to help prevent robberies like the ones at his store.

"I find it rather disparaging that the city can afford to build a $4.5 million sports complex, but they can't afford enough detectives to protect people's property," Collins said.

Collins said he voiced his concerns at a City Council meeting Sept. 12.

Collins said his family has sustained severe emotional distress from the three robberies.

His daughter was one of the two victims at the Burger King when it was robbed after closing Sept. 9.

Collins said the store has lost approximately $15,000 from the three robberies.

He said the robberies have been bad for employee morale.

"Every time that happens, I lose employees," Collins said

Collins said crime in Orem has more than doubled since 1989, but the Orem Police Department employs fewer officers than it did 10 years ago.

But Orem Chief of Police Mike Larson said that is not true.

Larson said the Orem Police Department actually employs more detectives now than it did in 1989.

He also said the crime rate in Orem has not gone up in the past decade.

"The crime rate has stayed consistent with population growth in the last 15 years," he said.

Larson said the major crime rate has actually gone down significantly in Orem over the last three years.

"The major crime rate in Orem decreased 13 percent in 1997 alone," Larson said.

He also said the major crime rate decreased 9 percent in 1998 and 4 percent in 1999.

Larson said Collins has agreed to meet with Orem police officers and discuss measures he can take to make Burger King a safer environment.

He said police officers will review operating procedures and hiring practices to help prevent future robberies at the Burger King.

Cindy Oviatt, public relations spokeswoman for Burger King, said most robberies like those at the Orem Burger King are carried out by former employees.

"If you took those ski masks off from the other night, you'd find a past employee," she said. "When you work somewhere, you know the routine, so it's an easy target."

Oviatt said Collins is currently taking precautions to protect the Burger King from future robberies.

She said Collins is keeping the alarm system and locks in good condition and is making sure safe codes and other information is kept secret from employees.

education

sometimes even their parents, Lacouture said.

Many of the teachers at her school push the kids and try to make them something they are not, and the kids react negatively, Lacouture said.

"Teachers who don't respect the kids don't get respect back," Lacouture said.

Porter said she notices that more kids are losing respect for those around them and have gotten lazier and apathetic.

"It's more than just doing a lesson," Porter said. "You have to make sure they (the kids) are on task and focused."

Because every teacher is different in their teaching and discipline methods, they have to go back to it every day, Lacouture said.

"If you don't strictly stick to what you say, then everything you say after that goes out the window," Lacouture said.

All the laws regarding the treatment of children in the classroom make it difficult for teachers to show their kids how they feel about them.

Porter said the only safe place to touch a child is on the shoulders, but if a child comes up to hug her, she will hug them back.

Porter said she watches what she does and says, but she tries to show the children how she feels in other ways. She writes them "love notes" and puts them in their desks to find later.

"I'm affectionate. I'm going to hug my kids," Bevell said. "Can you imagine being in a classroom where the teacher didn't let you know that they loved you?"

Lacouture said she understands why they have the laws, but she shows her kids how proud she is by giving them high-fives or telling them they are awesome. She said they need to know how they are doing or else they don't understand why they bother to do it.

Besides the affection barrier, teachers today have to deal with a multicultural barrier.

Ramona Cutri, an associate professor in the department of education, said that within the next five years, Utah schools will not hire teachers who do not have certification in English as second language.

BYU has a good ESL program designed for mainstream teachers, which teaches them how to make the curriculum understandable to children who do not speak English, Cutri said.

Around 75 percent of the students in Lacouture's school are Hispanic, and English is their second language.

Lacouture said the students have an average reading level of third grade, and they do not have the basic skills to survive.

"Teaching to everyone's ability is hard," Lacouture said. "The main thing is getting everyone involved."

Porter had two semesters of Spanish in college, so all the Spanish kids go to her classroom. She said it has been tough, and she usually comes home exhausted.

The professors try to prepare their students for the everyday joys and trials of teaching.

Cutri said they try and teach the students to interview the school as much as the school interviews them. BYU has a good reputation, so the students have marketable skills.

"They tell it how it is, and that's what we need to hear," Bevell said.

Bevell said her teachers tell her how hard teaching is but remind her of the rewards.

"They make me want to go out and be a good teacher," Bevell said.

Porter said her professors made everything applicable and that they are great advisors and mentors.

Lacouture said she feels a little differently. She said all of her teachers had been out of the public school system for a long time and many of the principles they taught would not always work in the classroom.

Lacouture said she would have liked a class on how to make and implement lesson plans since no one taught her how to do that. When she did her student teaching, the teacher never checked her lesson plans.

It's a lot of hard work – the hours that go into it — hours of preparation, rethinking, grading, changing lesson plans, Lacouture said.

Teaching requires change, Cutri said.

"There is a bad image out there that once you learn how to be a teacher, you never have to change."

She said she wouldn't want to go to a dentist who used the same tools and methods of 20 years ago, so why would anyone want teachers who use the same teaching materials and style they did when they started?

Changing lesson plans and teaching methods can be difficult, especially when the teachers are discouraged and exhausted, she said.

Discouragement is not an unfamiliar feeling among these messengers of knowledge.

Although education has improved, there needs to be more money and more funding to make the programs work, Porter said.

Porter said she feels lucky to teach in her area because the parents appreciate the teachers and support them.

Lacouture does not have the same support. She said there is a lack of community support because of the reputation of the school, and they have less parental involvement than they would like.

"People look at us and our school as not functional," Lacouture said. "We need support."

Cutri said the teachers who have grown up in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and know the importance of the family have a hard time because the family resource is not as available as it once was.

The money issue and lack of community recognition has also made it difficult for the teachers to stay motivated.

Utah has one of the lowest teacher salaries in the area. Cutri said the explanation they have been given is that the property tax base is not as large here as in other places. There are also more children per household.

"It's not the money," Lacouture said. "It's seeing the kids appreciate what I've done."

Although Bevell still has some time to learn, she said the money has never been an issue. She said she didn't even know what the starting pay was for teachers.

"I want kids to walk out of my classroom thinking they can accomplish anything," Bevell said. "I want them to walk out better than they came in."

HOW DO YOU KNOW WHEN YOU'RE REALLY IN LOVE?
by Robert K. McIntosh
Written by a counselor of thirty years and drawing on the scriptures and writings of the prophets, the author tries to give the tools needed for finding the answer to this most frequently asked question.
Paperback. Regular price $13.95

THE MILLIONAIRE MIND
by Thomas Stanley
A follow up to the Millionaire Next Door, this book targets a different segment of the population-those who have substantial wealth, live well, but use little or no consumer credit. The author looks at who these people are, what their spouses are like, whether religion is important in their lives, and other characteristics.
Hardcover. Regular price $26.95

GERSHON'S MONSTER
by Eric Kimmel and illustrated by Jon Muth
Gershon is not sorry for his mistakes, he sweeps them into the cellar and then at Rosh Hashanah puts them all in a sack and dumps them into the sea. Rosh Hashanah is a day of repentance and you can't repent without feeling remorse, so Gershon's actions are destined to return and haunt him.
Hardcover. Regular price $16.95

ORDINARY RESURRECTIONS
by Jonathan Kozol
In a departure from the bleakness of earlier works, this is a book of unguarded optimism and the miracles of children who view the world without cynicism. It is a book about teachers in good, but underfunded schools and those who watch over the children.
Hardcover. Regular price $25.00

ongress candidate talks trash

hAg Anderson
ewsroom.byu.edu
Staff Writer

district congressional can- Kathleen McConkie- bod is fed up with the in her district.

aking out the trash. Conkie-Collinwood has program called "Clean luthleen" to meet with her district and involve picking up litter.

ogram began earlier this in Cedar City when bod-McConkie teamed up out 30 students from Utah University and tic candidate for Senate well to clean up a local, owned field. The group everything from fast-food wrappers to bottles of beer.

"It was something we could do while we were campaigning to make a difference on a little spot on the map," McConkie-Collinwood said. "People are willing to get together even to do something that simple."

Since the success of that first outing in Cedar City, "Clean with Kathleen" events will be held in Layton, Bountiful, Ogden and possibly Logan.

People in the community and local dignitaries will be asked to lend a hand to the clean-up effort, said Tracy Hancey, campaign manager for McConkie-Collinwood.

Hancey said cleaning up is necessary for posterity's sake.

"We need a nice place to live for our families," she said. "We're going to make the state a better place, either before or after (McConkie-Collinwood) wins."

Locals coming together to solve local problems is what "Cleaning with Kathleen" represents, said McConkie-Collinwood. She said voters are not satisfied with current representation of the 1st District and are anxious for change.

McConkie-Collinwood said she admits the challenge of knowing the local issues of every community in her district would be difficult, but said she wants to shoulder the task.

"In order to represent someone you have to be willing to visit them and see what problems they have to face," she said. "I really believe that there has got to be more access between our elected officials and the people they represent."

their customers are college-aged.

Researchers say college students are more vulnerable to be hooked because of the developmental characteristics of late adolescence and young adulthood.

In a stage of the search for identity, students drop the books after school to become sorceresses, robots and 7-foot, sword-wielding barbarians. Most students at BYU say it's an escape.

"It's a good outlet for stress, anger and frustration," said a 27-year-old former BYU student whose gaming name is "Freezer Burn." He admitted that video games contributed to the time wasted that led to his failing grades. He eventually dropped out of BYU.

"It may not be the most positive thing to do, but a little healthy competition never hurt anyone," he said.

Each freshman class is assumed to be more computer savvy than the last and computers are in almost every dorm room. At nighttime the floors are peppered with bombshells and gunshots.

"They can take over your life if you're not careful," said freshman Adam Callens, blurry-eyed from a midnight dose of "Quake 3," where the object of the game, like most, is to kill whatever gets in the way.

"You have to set aside time to play, time to study and time for girls," Callens said.

Mike Shen, owner of Net Nut, a computer gaming store in Provo, said his game tournaments he holds on Friday nights fill up quickly.

"They're all between the ages of 18 and 21," Shen said.

The Social Outlet

What worries Orzack is that Internet games can begin to replace the need for social connections.

A BYU student can connect with fellow gamers from Britain to Australia, and a handful of players can play simultaneously the same contest. Suddenly the need for a social outlet is fulfilled.

"It's like going to a great dance club," Jeppsen said. "You get online and like in 'Everquest,' when there are 10,000 people doing it, it's like another world."

Junior A.J. Mott has spent eleven months in the other world.

His infatuation with video games "started heavily" in April 1999, said the sophomore from Citrus Heights, Calif.

"It's an addiction of time as opposed to substance," Mott said.

Mott and his three roommates converted a bedroom of their apartment into a cyber-den, lined with four computers.

The group formed a team with gamers from Chicago that played in an on-line league of a bloody version of capture the flag. For 11 months they lived double lives with a group of students they have never met, pulling all-nighters and putting off other responsibilities.

"Things kind of slid a bit. Homework wasn't a priority," Mott said. "Finally you say maybe 10 hours a day on the computer isn't the best thing."

It's still just a game

Roper said he is as hooked to his own games as most users. Fortunately for him, playing "Diablo II" is part of the job.

He half-chuckles when he thinks about the games becoming addictive.

"If it's affecting your everyday ability to clothe and feed yourself then it's a problem," Roper said.

Orzack said she knows the majority of Internet video-game users are using them for the right reason. She said a way to know if it controls oneself is to see what the aims are.

She notes that, "ever since colleges were around, students have wasted their time in some fashion." But, she said, if it affects the studies, grades go down or if students don't go to social connections, than they have a problem.

She said students should play with a time limit to make sure they aren't becoming obsessed with the goal of winning.

But most students who play said it's often hard to do.

"You end up thinking, 'I'll get one game in before class' and then you end up missing class," Dayton said.

Former spy chief flees Peru

Associated Press

LIMA, Peru — Peru's ousted spy chief fled Sunday to Panama, triggering opposition demands that President Alberto Fujimori's government explain how the former top aide eluded arrest and prosecution over a bribery scandal at home.

Though Fujimori faced opposition anger, the escape of Vladimiro Montesinos could resolve for him the potentially dangerous question of what to do with his former aide, who it was feared could rally his powerful allies in the military to his side if prosecuted.

Montesinos' pre-dawn flight, made in secrecy, came after Latin American countries, backed by the United States, urged Panama to take him in despite its earlier refusal - apparently to smoothe Peru's way out of its political crisis.

Fujimori said nothing about the flight of the man, who because of a bribery scandal forced the president to cut short his rule by calling early elections in which he will not run. Instead, Fujimori attended an annual ceremony honoring the armed forces, where he praised the intelligence services and military.

"The gentleman is in Panama," the country's Vice Foreign Minister Harmodio Arias said, after Montesinos arrived in Panama shortly after dawn Sunday.

President Mireya Moscoso's office said Latin American leaders and the Organization of American States had asked Panama to reconsider an earlier refusal to grant Montesinos asylum.

"They asked us to reconsider, considering the significance that Mr. Montesinos' leaving Peru would have for facilitating the democratic process and peace in that South American country," the office said in a statement.

A spokesman at the U.S. Embassy in Lima, Douglas Barnes, said the OAS endorsement of taking in Montesinos was "supported by countries of the hemisphere, including the United States."

The exact whereabouts o Montesinos had been cloaked secrecy since a videotape w aired Sept. 14 apparently showi him bribing an opposition law maker.

That sparked demands b opposition leaders that Mo tesinos - seen by many as eve more powerful than Fujimori - b arrested and prosecuted.

Fujimori announced two day after the scandal broke that h would call new elections and n stand as a candidate. He als vowed to disband Montesinos spy agency and called for a tho ough criminal probe of th alleged bribery. Now, the opposi tion wanted answers about th government's role in the escape.

Fernando Olivera, the oppos tion congressman who reveale the videotape, said he believe Montesinos' flight to Panam resulted from a "shameful inte vention" by Fujimori after became clear that top militar commanders would soone replace the president than l Montesinos be prosecuted.
